Concluding Reflections

This ministerial session marks a pivotal moment in the international effort to implement the two-state solution. By consolidating the work of thematic roundtables and amplifying shared priorities, it reaffirms the broad-based commitment to peace, justice, and dignity for all. The discussions and interventions today serve not only to distill consensus, but to shape a forward-looking agenda, anchored in international law, sustained by multilateral cooperation, and driven by the imperative to translate commitments into concrete, coordinated action on the ground. It will enable the continued mobilization of the international community at leaders' level around these commitments on the sidelines of the 80th United Nations General Assembly in September 2025.
